

Communication Policy Statement

The Australian Health Information Council (AHIC) advises Australia's Health Ministers on long-term directions and national strategic reform issues in the more effective and efficient use of information management and information and communications technology (IM & ICT) in health.

Identifying emerging trends in the health and ICT sectors, and their potential impacts on health outcomes, is fundamental to ensuring AHIC is an effective advocate, providing informed, accurate and practical advice.

AHIC actively and openly seeks to engage interested organisations and individuals to generate information exchange and gather insightful feedback.

AHIC is committed to communicating, consulting and strengthening relationships in the interest of positive, national, health IM & ICT reform.

Organisations and individuals are encouraged to participate in our consultations, review and respond to our discussion papers, register their interest in receiving AHIC's e-bulletins or contact us directly at: ahic.secretariat@health.gov.au
